PERFORMANCE COMMENTARY

The euro zone debt crisis continued to unfold in a month marred by the death of Steve Jobs, floods in Thailand, a major earthquake in Turkey, social unrest in Greece and France, spreading of the anti-capitalism 'Occupy Wall Street' movement and violence around the capture of Gaddafi. After ending the third quarter of 2011 at a two-year low, equity markets rallied strongly in October, as European politicians appeared to regain some control over the Greek debt crisis.

September's economic data showed a sideways drift for most countries other than the euro zone which is now close to a recession. There were no changes in interest rate policies, but the ECB unveiled a new liquidity programme for banks, while the Bank of England resumed quantitative easing. Almost unnoticed US companies entered yet another earnings reporting season, with some severe disappointments on the cards.

Most of the attention was on Greece which raced against time to make sufficient spending cuts to secure the release of a further €8 billion in aid which has been deferred to November.

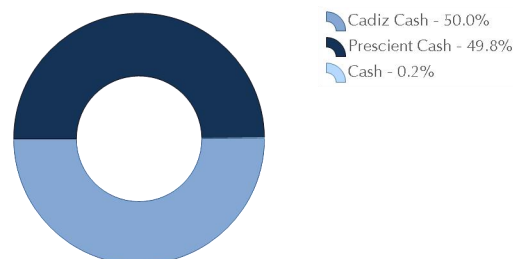

The last week of October finally brought some resolution. European leaders agreed that €110 billion needs to be injected into the European banking system and that banks will need to hold more capital. They also persuaded bondholders to take 50% voluntary losses on Greek debt and agreed to boost the European bail-out fund to €1 trillion, but without concrete proposals. The announcement initially sent the markets soaring.

Minister of Finance Gordhan's Mid-term Budget Policy Statement dominated the South African economic news. As expected, growth forecasts were revised lower over the next three years, but inflation estimates were surprisingly benign. The economy is expected to expand by 3.1% this year, 3.4% in 2012 and 4.1% in 2013. Consumer inflation is projected to average 5.0% in 2011, 5.4% in 2012 and 5.6% in 2013. The budget deficit is expected to expand at a moderate pace as spending is curtailed, with the budget shortfall now forecast at 5.5% of GDP in 2011/12.

The FTSE/JSE All Share Index ended the month up 9.3%, with Resources up 11.4%, Industrials 10.5% and Financials 6.4%. The bond market recovered from the earlier foreign sell-off, rising by 2.8%.
